Got Photos?

We now have a group on Flickr, the photo sharing site. It's main use is to show off our lean, sculptured, swimmers' bodies. However, it supports discussions and has other features. Looking is as easy as going to the group's web page.

If you have meet photos or photos of other team events and activities, you can donate them to the photo pool. Here's how.

1. Get yourself a flickr account (free).
2. Join the Masters of South Texas group, which you can do from the group page.
3. Upload the photos to your flickr account, from the web, via email, or using a downloadable tool.
4. Send them to the group's photo pool. (Whew!)

Of course it's easier after the first time around (unlike swimming) because you only have to do Steps 3 and 4.

The photo pool already has a bunch of photos from last year's Worlds. We need more!

[...] Great job to our hikers taking on the Grand Canyon Rim to Rim last weekend. Led by our fearless leader Buz Kroner....Chris Mayhew, Chuck Oswald and Lynn Francis, plus lots of friends/family all created great memories. Total time was between 10 and 12 hours. WOW!!! Great photos were taken by all. They will be sure to share those with you and tell their stories of a trip, and challenge, of a lifetime! [The webmaster hopes that they will add their photos to the MOST Flickr Group's Photo Pool using these instructions.] [...]

Getting Started with Flickr

You have to give Yahoo a certain amount of personal information, choose an ID and a password and register. The hardest part of the process.

Go to the Flickr Home Page: <http://flickr.com/>. Click on the Create Your Account button.

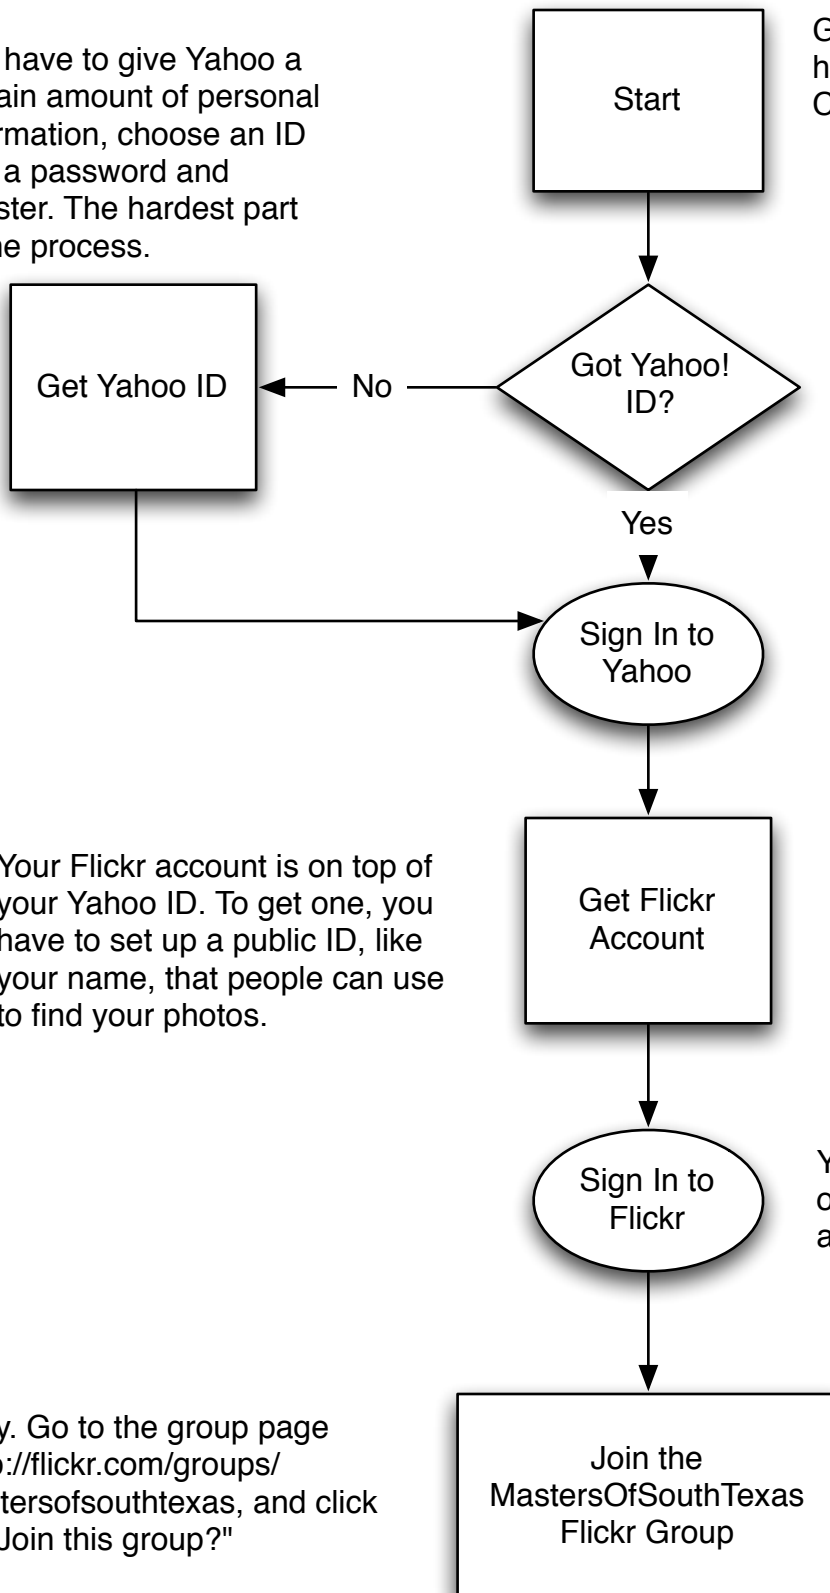

You have a Yahoo ID if you have DSL service from AT&T or if our email ends in yahoo.com.

Yahoo asks you to sign in or supply your password at the oddest times. It's a good idea to have them at hand, but you can stay signed in on one machine.

Your Flickr account is on top of your Yahoo ID. To get one, you have to set up a public ID, like your name, that people can use to find your photos.

You should only have to do this once. Flickr is pretty good about keeping you signed in.

Easy. Go to the group page (<http://flickr.com/groups/mastersofsouthtexas/>), and click on "Join this group?"
